

Part three :How to start an essay :Quick and Simple

The most important thing when beginning your essay is to select a good topic. You will likely have been given an essay prompt or an essay question but then choosing the topic and the theme is completely up to your imagination. It is important to choose something that you have a passion about and can easily write about. Once you have done this and made the necessary preparations, you can begin writing.

Preparation

No essay can be started without good planning and therefore it is important that once you have chosen your topic, you spend a good deal of time outlining your ideas and coming up with a detailed plan of what you are going to write.

Essay Introduction

The start of your essay should immediately grab the attention of the reader and cause them to continue reading.

Include A Thesis Statement

The first few lines of your essay should detail the thesis statement. This should briefly outline the question posed and a summarised answer of your take on it. It does not need to be detailed at all but should engage the reader and give them a good idea of what the essay is going to be about.

Clearly outline the topic and your opinions on the subject without going into too much detail- you can delve in deeper in the body of the text.

Make sure to give some background on the subject, you should presume that the reader has no previous knowledge.

Conclusion

When you begin to write an essay there are a few key points to remember. The main point is that the start of your essay should be appealing and clearly detail what is going to be discussed.
